On account of ill-health, was forced to live largely abroad, but devoted himself to the work of letter-writing and criticism of proof-sheets for friends. Never published any book, 'but these letters were something unique for their penetrating sagacity, their suggestiveness, and the combined terseness and humour of their style.' Corresponded with J. Clerk Maxwell, on physics; with Donkin and De Morgan on pure mathematics and probability, and with Professor Jevons on symbolic logic. The amount of penetrative thought and sagacious criticism which he brought to bear on the proof-sheets submitted to him was wonderful; 'this' was combined with a rare and noble love of truth, a patient determination to work so long as sufficient strength was retained, and an apparent incapacity to feel jealousy at the success of others.' Died Nov. 25, 1882, at Barnet. Brother of Charles H. (1853). (Harrow Sch. Reg.; Law Lists; Inns of Court; J. Vern, The Cambridge Review, iv, iv; Proceedings, London Math. Soc. 14 (1884), 323.)

C. of Earmley with Alnington, -1841-4. R. of Hathersage, Derbs., 1845-7. Appears after this date until 1866 in Clergy List, but with no address. Brother of Ellen Nussey, the intimate friend of Charlotte Brontë, to whom he made a proposal of marriage in 1830, which she immediately refused; an entry in his diary for Mar. 8, 1839 reading: 'received an unfavourable reply from C.B. The will of the Lord be done.' Charlotte writes the 'common sense style' of his proposal in a letter to Ellen Nussey. Believed to have been the original of 'St John Rivers' in Jane Eyre. While at Cambridge, his diary records a social occasion: 'Stayed to supper: never asked to take family prayers, nor to say grace. Much hurt that they did not see the propriety and feel the necessity of this line of conduct.' Married about 1845, his wife's name not being recorded; she is referred to by Charlotte as 'Mrs Henry.' Charlotte and Ellen apparently stayed at Hathersage, but he was on his honeymoon, the result that the Derbyshire countryside was described in Jane Eyre, and Hathersage became the village of 'Morton.' Charlotte corresponded fairly frequently with Henry up to the time of his marriage. After 1847 his name disappears from the Brontë-Nussey correspondence. His 'Diary and Sermons' in manuscript was in the possession of Mr J. J. Stead, of Heckmondwike, Yorks. Probably brother of Joshua (1817). (Mrs Gaskell, Life of Charlotte Brontë; The Brontës, Life and Letters; Clergy List.)
